Oftentimes, language service providers (LSPs) overlook the importance of timely payments to freelance translators, lending itself to poor cash flow management. In result, this poorly affects LSPs' relationships with its freelancers, making it hard to develop loyal and sustainable partnerships. That's why prompt payments that are consistent, automated, and actively managed can transform how LSPs recruit and retain quality freelance translators.

“Freelance resources have choices about who they do business with and, in our view, it’s both unethical and incredibly short-sighted to dismiss them as expendable,” agreed Wordbank CEO Lindsay Johnson, whose freelancers have given her company a perfect 5.0 reliability score on PaymentPractices.net.

“People always do better work when they feel valued, and we work hard to develop lasting relationships with our in-country resources,” says Johnson. “That results in better linguistic quality, better support for project managers who know they can rely on our linguists to deliver and, ultimately, a better service for our clients.”
